

Insurance for participants in Norwegian Rally events

When a foreign rally driver wants to participate in a rally in Norway, several aspects of the insurance must be considered:

1. Personal accident insurance: It is important for the driver/co-driver to have personal accident insurance that covers any injuries that may occur during the rally.
2. Car insurance: The car used in the rally must have liability insurance. This includes liability insurance that covers damage to third parties during race/training. In some cases, the rally organizer may require specific insurance, which the driver must arrange before the competition.
3. Organizer's insurance: Rally organizers in Norway under the Norwegian Automobile Sports Federation (NBF) have a liability insurance that covers participants, spectators and property damage if the organizer becomes liable for damages that may occur during the event.

To participate in a rally in Norway, the driver often must register with the Norwegian Automobile Sports Federation (NBF) or the organizer of the event and follow their rules and guidelines. This may include providing proof of insurance coverage as part of the registration process. It is possible that foreign insurance policies may cover activities in Norway, but this should be checked carefully with the insurance company in the driver's home country.

It is important for foreign drivers to start this process well in advance of the rally, as there can be many details to arrange to ensure that all insurance requirements are met.
